Excerpt: . . . MY COUNTRY. My country! How can I begin my lay But with thy name! Thine image night and day Lives in my thoughts, that love to wander free In the sweet privilege of prayer for thee, My native land. They tell me of her woe Beneath the ban of war. Must it be so So hath it been before, when first she stood In all the bloom of primal maidenhood, Fresh from our fathers hands. How dearly bought Her liberty, with richest blessings fraught! So must it ever be. The jewel lost Is priceless; countless, then, must be the cost Of its redemption. Hath it not been so The bleeding heart and broken household know. Small is the conquest that the sword achieves; Tis by the mind true victory must be won, And wars wild sway, howeer successful, leaves The noble work of triumph but begun. Our warriors win; but, when their work is done, Great minds must seal the sufferings of the slain; Warm hearts must hail the glad, returning sun Of glorious peace, slow rising oer the plain Strewn by the hand of Death, or victory is in vain. Thus, when our fathers laid their armor down, How beautiful the lesson they have taught! What skill, what moderation came to crown The costly freedom by their valor wrought! What words of wisdom all their counsel fraught, Moulding our country in one perfect whole! What high resolve, what dignity of thought Beamed from...
