Excerpt: . . . mothers and fathers will impel them to adopt similar aims and ways in their own homes. The Cleveland school authorities already realize the importance of their home-influencing activities at the Eagle school. They are conscious too of the need of similar undertakings in other schools. As time goes by they will undoubtedly devote more and more energy to the elaboration of city-wide machinery for bringing parents into immediate touch with the school system and that machine will be a part of the larger development we are foretelling. The School And The Street Making a book-shelf in a school shop demonstrates one of the fundamental things of moral life--that personal toil normally precedes the possession of a valuable commodity. The boy who passes from the manual-training room into a back-alley crap game, where chance, not skill, confers wealth, is confronted with a challenging contradiction of the...
